Chiara Germelli

UX/UI DESIGNER

HELLO!

I’m a UX and UI Designer

I design digital experiences with people at the center, from user research to prototyping and usability testing, with an approach that combines analytical rigor and human sensitivity.

I studied how digital systems are built and how people attribute meaning to what they use: I don't just ask myself "does it work?", but above all "does it make sense to the person using it?".

CASE STUDY

CONTEXT

Dance school based primarily in Pisa, which, in addition to its own classes, manages the rental of the facility to other courses.

PROBLEM

The school manages three websites:

- the school's website
- the facility's website
- the website of a dance festival organized once a year

The three separate websites create confusion and fragmentation, leaving users unsure where to look for what.

Unification of three websites into a single platform

RESEARCH

How are other dance school websites organized?

Where are events and festivals listed?

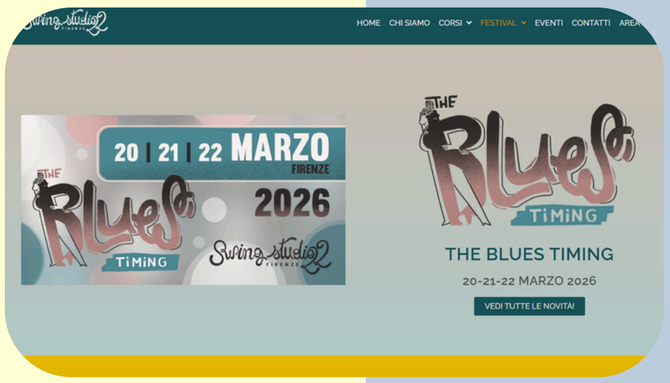

What information is provided?

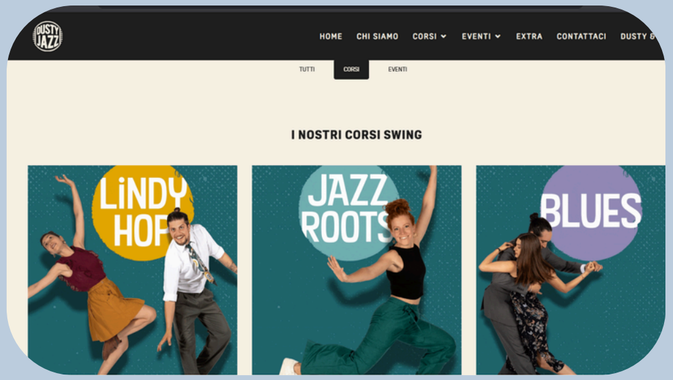

What is currently included across the three websites to be unified?

What matters most to the user?

Competitor analysis and content inventory

INFORMATION ARCHITECTURE

Card sorting and sitemap

Identification of the key elements characterizing each section, and content organization to make it more easily accessible and support user navigation.

USERS

Examples of user personas created to understand users, their interests and their needs.

User personas

"I want information about locations and times without having to write an email."

USER PERSONA

Giulia

ABOUT

Works in an office from Monday to Friday, and on weekends she likes going out with friends.
She's been thinking for a while about starting to dance to socialize and get some exercise, but she has never taken lessons before. She doesn't know anyone in the swing dance scene and feels a bit intimidated about the idea of showing up alone.

GOALS

- Find a beginner course that fits her schedule and commitments
- Understand how to book a trial lesson and whether she needs to show up with a partner

FRUSTRATIONS

- Doesn't know how to tell the courses apart, isn't sure if they're held in multiple cities or locations
- Afraid of choosing the wrong course/time slot

"I've got 10 tabs open with other festivals — if your site is slow or unclear, I move on to the next one."

USER PERSONA

Paolo

ABOUT

Has been dancing swing for 5 years and sees festivals as an opportunity to train with different teachers, meet friends from all over Italy, and travel. He follows several schools and communities on social media and plans his weekends around the festival calendar. He's used to quickly navigating between different websites to compare offerings.

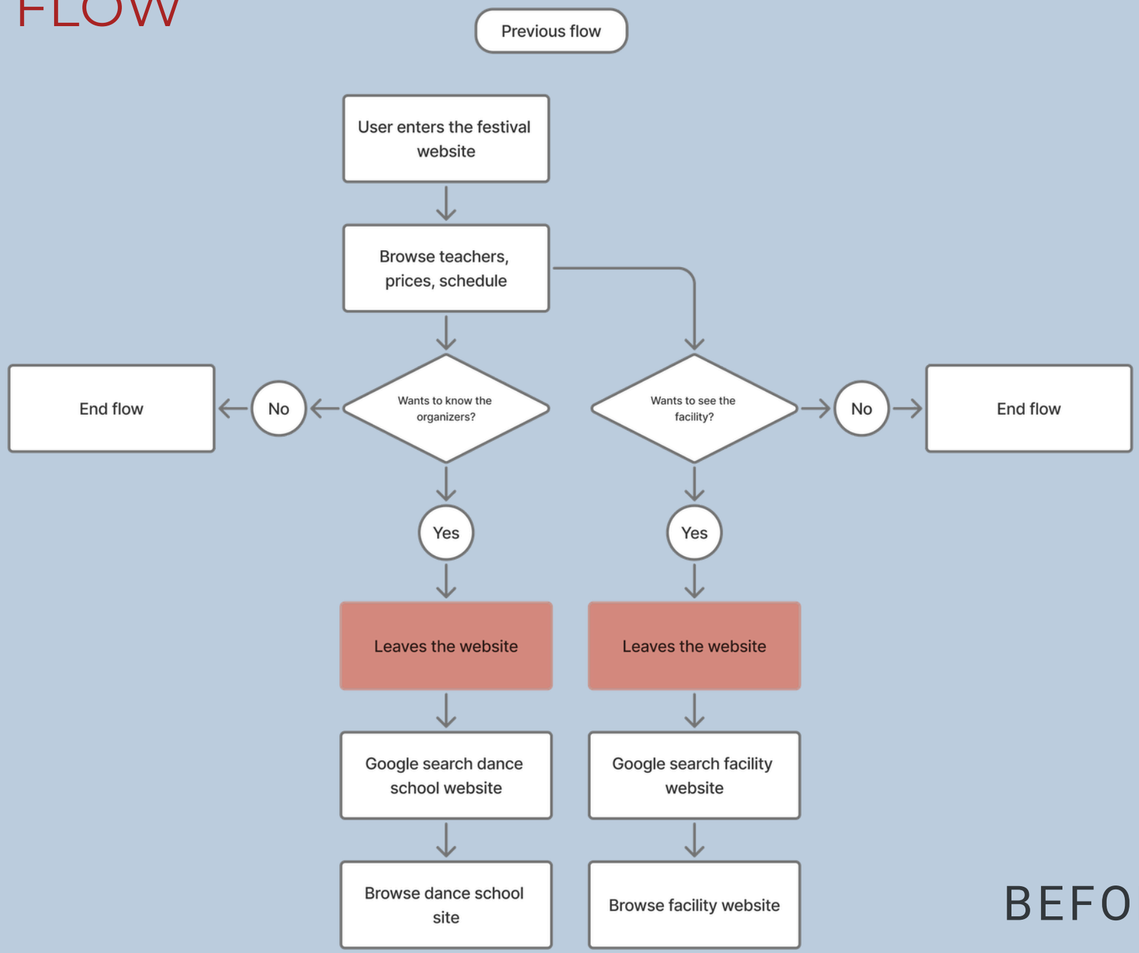

GOALS

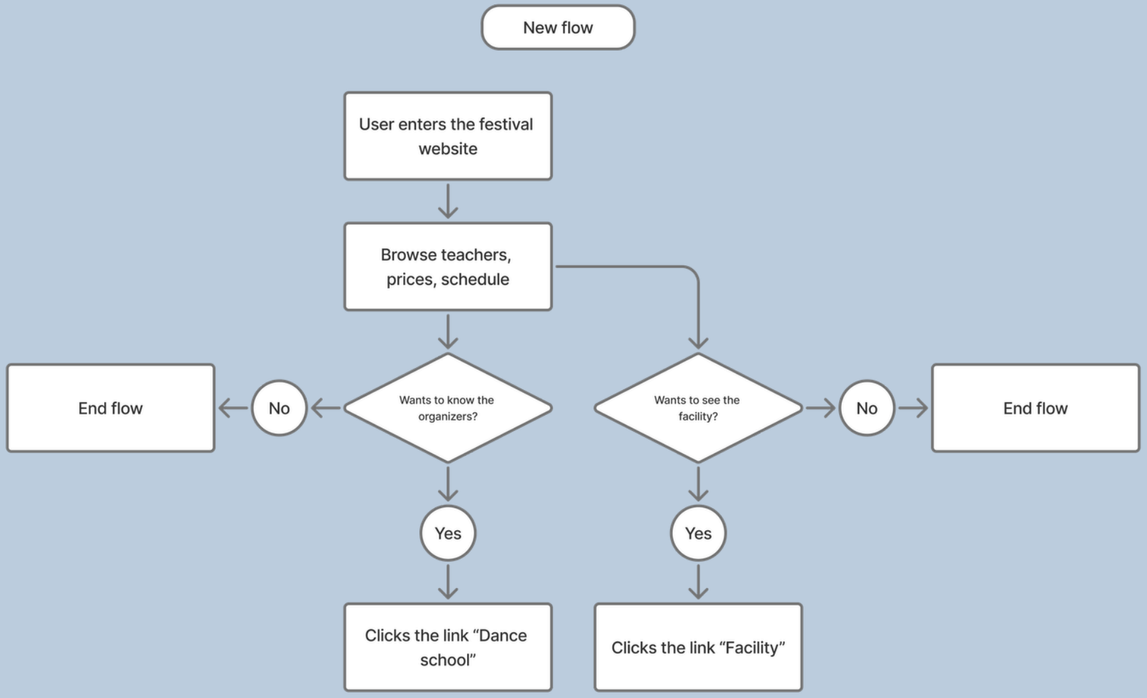

- Quickly find dates, workshops, and guest teachers
- Purchase the pass

FRUSTRATIONS

- In the past, he's found festival information scattered between the website and social media
- Difficulty understanding whether the festival is connected to a school

FLOW

User flow

Unification improves the flow:

BEFORE

User has to check three different websites to get complete information, high likelihood of drop-off.

AFTER

User finds all information on a single website, no exits or interruptions.

Wireframes to provide an initial representation of the interface elements: options for desktop, tablet, and mobile formats.

Wireframe low fidelity

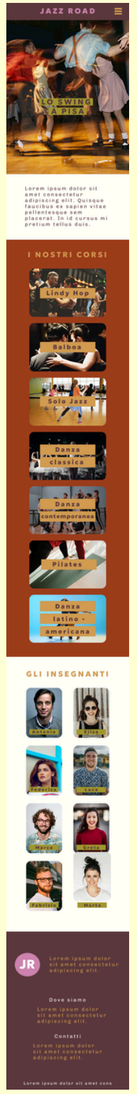

Mockup with colors, styles, and typography: a representation closer to the final version, useful for presenting to the client.

Mockup high fidelity

RESULTS

Of the 6 competitors I analyzed, 5 place class schedules and registration in the main menu, so I made ‘Courses’ a top-level menu item.
The courses can also be found in the main page, as they are one of the key pieces of information.

The content inventory revealed duplicate content (contact details, photos etc. repeated on all three sites), which I consolidated.
I removed 5 pages because they were outdated.

The festival only happens once a year, but it’s a strong draw, so I created a dedicated section that can be featured on the homepage, without needing a separate website.

HOME RENTAL COMPANY - DESIGN CHALLENGE

CHALLENGE

5 days to create a conversion-focused landing page concept for a new programme that teaches people how to launch and grow a short-term rental business, desktop and mobile.

The page had to speak to two audiences at once: people who want to leave their office job and start from scratch and people who already manage a few units and want to grow.

Both are ambitious, short on time and sceptical of “guru” courses.

CONSTRAINTS

Two users: those who want to start from scratch and those who already manage a few units and want to scale.

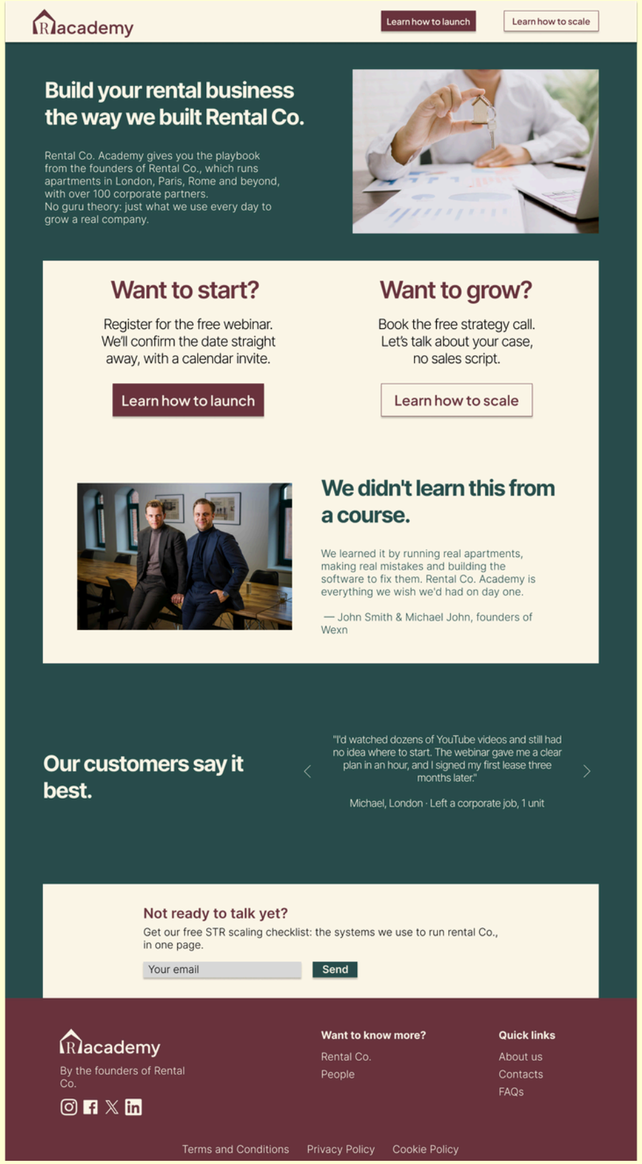

Two flows: free webinar registration for the first, strategy call booking for the second.

HOME RENTAL COMPANY - DESIGN

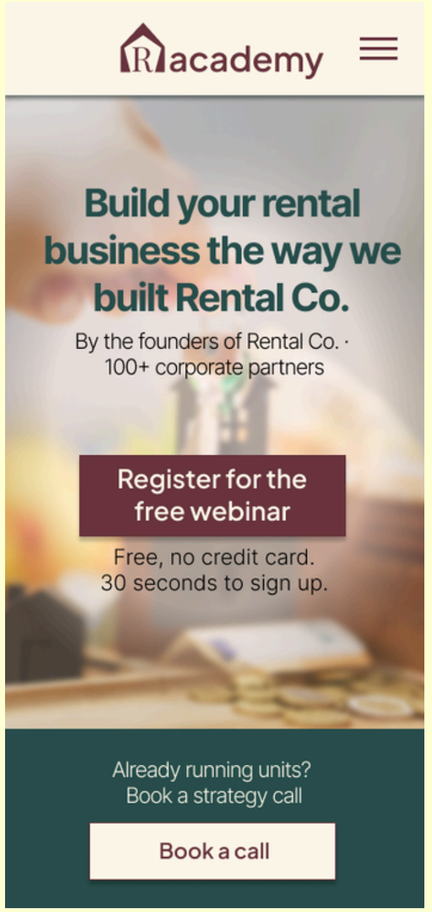

I gave the two paths equal space in the hero, with two different buttons: the eye lands on the primary one first, while the second stays easy to find

The founders’ photo and the reviews build trust, while the simple structure conveys reliability.

The reviews carousel saves vertical space, shows more voices and works naturally with a swipe on mobile.

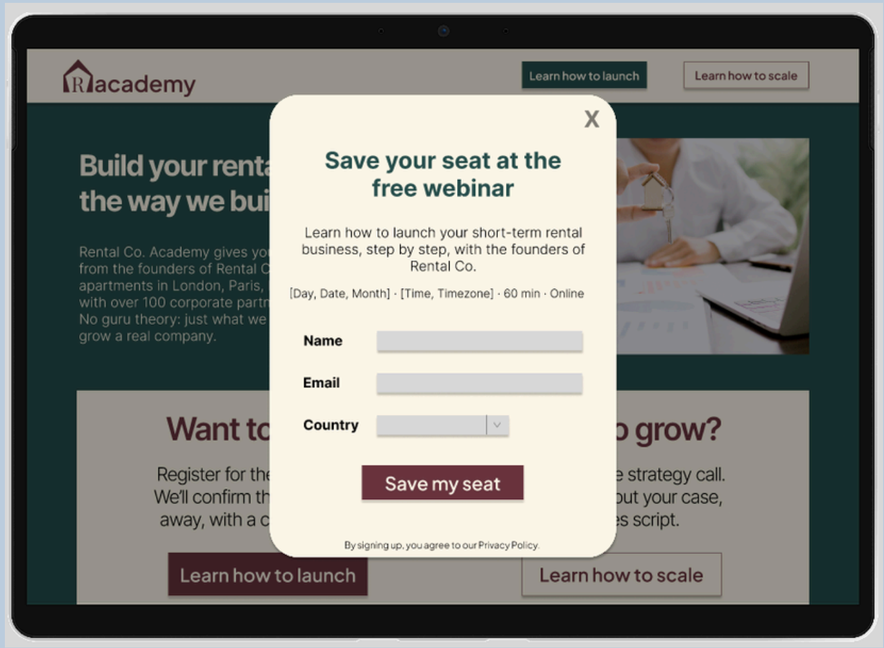

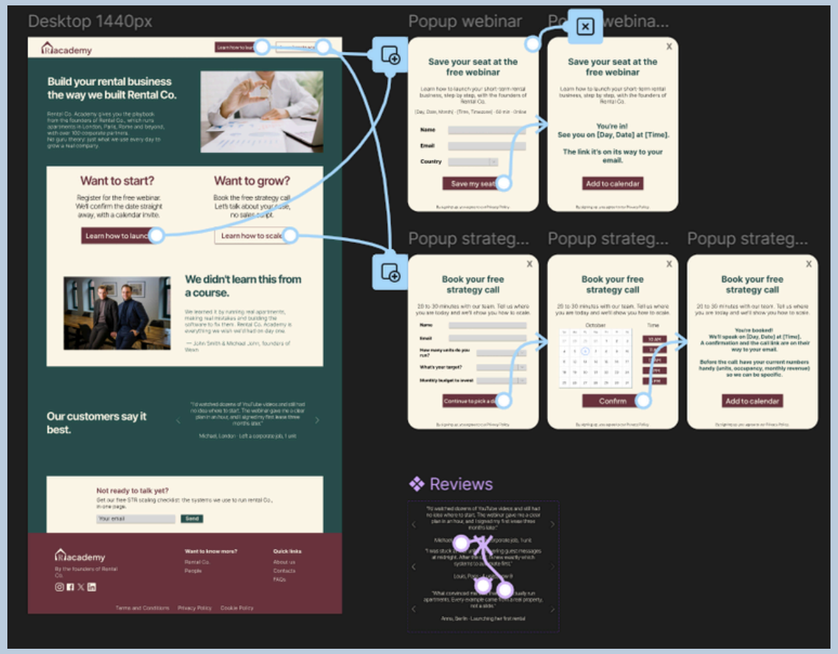

On mobile, the primary button carries more weight and appears in the first screen, as it is the main the main call to action.

*Data and photos have been changed for confidentiality.

RESPONSIVE PROTOTYPING

For the moment of commitment, I used a pop-up with the form, which keeps the visitor in context, with no page change or long scrolling, followed by a clear confirmation screen.

Click here to see the prototype.

Let’s work together!
